Tea in Japan.

Although tea has now become a general beverage throughout the world, it has been used in Japan for more than a thousand years, and its preparation there has almost reached the dignity of an art. Green tea is the most common, and is usually used, and the decoction is made by pouring upon it water heated to 176 deg. F. The Japanese drink tea without milk or sugar, which may deprive it of its delicate flavor.

They are also very particular to use teapots made of a peculiar kind of pottery, known by the name of "Kaki-yaki," which are not only very elegant, but also have the property of preserving the tea for a long time. It is an example of very high art, not to offer tea to every visitor, and, in shopping, the customer is served with tea before the goods are shown to him.

With him a certain apparatus for making tea, which is used with every new meal, however simple or elaborate.

The drinking of tea is also more prominent in the social customs of Japan, and has given rise to two kinds of tea houses, for which many years have been an essential part of society.

At these gatherings no expense is spared to make artistic and literary features prominent, and, although attended exclusively by gentlemen, appear to be carried on with more propriety and profit than can be said of many convivial feasts in the United States.

Labels Upon the Animal Kingdom.

A work upon natural history, published in 1880, describes the following remarkable creature: "There is not any sort of caterpillar but they are male, maugre and venomous. All caterpillars have a burning quality, and such as will readily fetch off the skin and flee it quickly, and raise blisters." In another place we read:

"The hairy caterpillars are most mischievous and dangerous amongst them all, and these are the most venomous or thinnest hairs, and the most venomous is that which is called Pitoycampe, whose byth. is poison."

Concerning the insidious worm we have this: "Worms are found to be very venomous in the kingdom of Major, and the inhabitants there due stand in so great fear of them, that they bee destroyed and slay them when they travel a journey." This was abundantly in such examples, the ignorant people who, when even now, in the most learned, w. b. regard to the lower orders of animal creation, three hundred years ago, and we find remnants of this feeling still extant.

Cure for Headache.

THE heart of Mrs. Anarchist Parsons must bubble over with joy as she notes the establishment of and increasing interest in the Sunday schools in Chicago designed to teach the young ideas of little nihilists how to shoot. Mrs. Parsons has endeavored to do her duty by her own precious offspring, and has compelled them to swear by the memory of their father, that life shall only be sweet to them while it offers a hope of revenge. If the home training of the other children in Chicago shall have been of the same instructive character as that of the little Parsons, Sunday school once a week is scarcely often enough to develop in their utmost vigor the traits in the young which in the old have created such consternation.

The Shorthorn cows first imported to the United States, and even down to the middle of the present century, were abundant milkers, but it has been the practice of the present generation to develop the beef making tendency until the milking qualities of the American Shorthorns have been bred out, and they are not regarded as a dairy breed in this country.

By Governor Ross's report of the stock interest of New Mexico we read that the assessment rolls of the sheep stock of the territory show 1,750,000 for 1887, and 1,500,000 for 1888, a deduction of 250,000 with a corresponding reduction on the tax rolls, they being uniformly assessed for taxation at one dollar a head for each year.

SHEEP men should not make the mistake of supposing that, because the wool tariff will stand, care in wool production will no longer be necessary. He who derives a profit from wool growing hereafter will be the producer of a good staple, carefully bred, carefully grown and carefully marketed.

NEW YORK State had on the first of January last, 1,540,053 cows, worth on an average $30.50 per head. Iowa is the second State as to the number of head, 1,255,432 valued at $23.80 per head.

A Naval Militia Recommended
New York, Dec. 4.—Aaron Vandepole, Chairman of the Naval Reserve Committee of the Board of Trade, has distributed a circular, seeking information and suggestions touching the feasibility of establishing a naval militia for the United States by Legislative enactment. Among those communicated with are General Schofield, Admiral Porter, Governor Fitzhugh Lee of Virginia, Governor Gordon of Georgia, General Beauregard of Louisiana, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jay Gould, Chauncey M. Depew and Claus Spreckels.

The Great Railroad Trust a Failure.
New York, Dec. 4.—It is officially announced this evening that all negotiations for a settlement of the railroad troubles west and southwest of Chicago, have been broken off, and the great clearing house plan has fallen through. The Committee, headed by President Withdrawn of the St. Louis & San Francisco road, is still in existence, but has not yet considered any plan. The failure of the clearing house scheme was caused by the opposition of President Houghtt of the Northern railroads.

Getting to Work.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The motion to call up the Union Pacific bill was not pressed by Frye, who said he would ask to have it made a special order for Tuesday next. The Senate then proceeded to consider the tariff bill.

HOUSE.

The Speaker laid before the House the annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of Currency, which were appropriately referred.

A resolution for an investigation into the purchase of real estate by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia was referred to a committee.

MacDonald of Minnesota presented a petition from the citizens of Northern Dakota for immediate admission into the Union of Southern Dakota and Montana, and for the consideration of Conventions in Northern Dakota, Washington and New Mexico. Referred to committee.

SENATE.

In the Senate the various annual reports, including that of the Secretary of the Treasury, were presented and appropriately referred.

Numerous bills were introduced and referred, including one for the construction of two steel rams to be armed with heavy rifled dynamite guns, and one for the construction of two steel cruisers to be armed with dynamite guns.

Frye at 12:30 moved to proceed to the consideration of the Union Pacific settlement bill. Mitchell opposed the motion on the ground that he had no time to examine the report; that it was a matter that should be looked into.

This morning the Senate Finance Committee considered the tariff bill, which Allison announced yesterday that he would call up to day, and also informally had under consideration Sherman's bill to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production, which was reported with amendments, to the Senate in September.

William H. Head of Delaware, has been appointed Examiner of National Banks for Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho and Montana.

On motion of Vance, the tariff bill was further postponed till to-morrow. Adjourned.

Teller also favored a postponement, as he had no opportunity to investigate the subject. Frye said the matter was a very familiar one to the Senate. A select committee had been appointed early in the last session to consider it, and devoted much time to the investigation. The committee found that the Pacific railroad companies, Central and Union, could not be connected, on account of the difference in their conditions and capacities; therefore the committee unanimously reported a bill, touching the Union Pacific only. A report had been made in writing, and had been printed as long ago as July. The bill, he thought, could be disposed of in four or five morning hours. Plumb said there was no particular reason for haste, as the debt would not mature for nine years. In the present temper of the public mind, and in view of some promises rather recently made, there were some obligations resting upon the Senate to discharge the public business before it took up any matter of private concern. In his judgment, the bill would require a good deal of debate, and without saying what might eventually become of the bill, he thought it would be found to be one of rather more importance than the Senator from Maine seemed to think. He therefore moved, if there be any spare time, that the Senate utilize it by taking up the tariff bill at once.

On motion of Allison, the Senate substitute tariff bill was then taken up for consideration.

Vance said that the Democratic Senators who had amendments to offer to the tobacco section (the first in the substitute) were not prepared for them to-day, but would be to-morrow; therefore, he asked a postponement until 2 o'clock. Agreed to.

Washington News.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Senator Allison of Illinois denies the report that he has been offered the Secretaryship of the Treasury by Harrison.

Representative Stone of Kentucky today introduced a joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Constitution, providing that the President and Vice-President be chosen every fourth year by the direct votes of the people. One section of the bill forbids the holding of any local or State elections, except for members of Congress, on the day set apart for the election of the President and Vice-President.

The Parnell Commission.
LONDON, Dec. 4.—Before the Parnell Commission to-day, a man named Kallahan testified that by the means of threats that they would burn his house by the moonlighters, who assaulted him and his family, he was compelled to swear loyalty to the League, and that he would quit the employment of a farmer then under boycott. Another witness, O'Connor, testified that George Twiss and John Connel induced him to join the inner circle of the League, saying it was a fine thing to be a soldier of Parnell's; that he would get a little pay for doing nothing. The circle which he joined is known as "The Boys." Witness took part in the moonlight expeditions of "The Boys" carrying guns and revolvers. Timothy Horan, Secretary of a branch of the League, paid witness and nine others six shillings each on the occasion of one outrage. Timothy Harrington promised to pay witness and others their own price if they could secure the election of one McSweeney, a member of the League, as Poor-law Guardian. He instructed them not to kill voters, but only frighten them greatly, and compel them to sign voting papers. Those who refused were compelled and coerced to sign. Harrington paid witness seven pounds. All members of the inner circle were members of the League. Membership in the League is essential to membership in "The Boys."

O'Connor further testified that the day before Collyott was shot, his offense was discussed at a meeting of the League Committee, and afterward Father O'Callaghan said he knew Collyott was an ugly man, and would soon be uglier. The Curriagh branch of the League applied to the Central League for evicted tenants, received a reply on the official note paper of the League, refusing any relief, on the ground that the district was too greatly disturbed. By the same post, however, was received a private letter, signed Timothy Harrington, in which the reason given for the refusal to respond to the appeal of the Curriagh branch, was that the place was too dull.

Opinions of the Message.
WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The following are among the expressions on Cleveland's message: Springer (Dem.) of Illinois said: "It is as strong on the tariff question as the last one, though not so explicit. It is a good paper."

Congressman Reed (Rep.) of Maine: "A year has brought about a great change. Then it was a condition that confronted us and it is a theory, and now apparently not so explicit."

Senator Ingalls (Rep.) of Kansas: "President Cleveland's imperturbability is entirely too perfect to result in the loss of his self-control."

Congressman Boutelle (Rep.) of Maine: "It is old straw thrashed again. The message is weary, stale, flat and unprofitable."

Senator Gorman (Dem.) of Maryland: "It is a very interesting, statesmanlike document."

Congressman Foran (Dem.) of Ohio: "The President has consented to let wool alone this time. If he had been so discreet before the Republicans would not have the next President and the next House."

An Attempt to Wreck an Express Train?

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 4.—A bold attempt was made to wreck the south-bound Oregon express, which was due here at 3:55 this morning. Several ties were laid across the track, and one of the rails had been pried off, after the spikes holding it had first been removed. The scene of the attempted wreck was just around a curve, where the road comes into this city from the American river bridge, and the only thing that prevented a wreck, was the fact that a freight train, which was moving slowly, struck the obstacles first, a short time before the Oregon express came thundering along. The workers had placed torpedoes on the track, and their explosions lead the engineer of the freight train to slow up and feel his way more carefully. At that early hour, all express passengers are commonly asleep, and the loss of life would have been great.

A Railroad Decision.
NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—The injunction suit of the Oregon Transcontinental Company against the Oregon Navigation Company was decided to-day in favor of plaintiffs. By this decision the latter company is prohibited from building branch lines, as well as using the money in the hands of the Trust Company, or the proceeds of the Oregon Navigation Company's consolidated mortgage bonds in the construction of the branches in question. It is now reported that the Union Pacific, in whose interest the branches were presumably built, and the Northern Pacific roads will buy the Oregon Navigation stock from the Oregon Transcontinental Company, and so secure control of the property without guaranteeing dividends on the floating stock.

The Haytian Not to Blame.
NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Captain Ramsey of the United States cruiser Boston, has come ashore. He says, from inquiry on his arrival at Port au Prince, in regard to the seizure of the steamer "Haytien Republic," he found that she had been selling munitions of war, and was going up and down the coast carrying insurgents. She was taken by a Haytian man-of-war and condemned, apparently, in the regular way.

Summary Action.
JACKSVILLE, Va., Dec. 4.—The town was nearly destroyed by fire last Friday night, with a loss of $100,000. Yesterday Henry O. Ballon, one of the heavy losers, charged Daniel C. and Berry Craig with setting the fire, and last night the Craigs were killed.

After the Sugar Trust.
NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—George R. A. Pryor, for the people of the State of New York, this morning opened the sugar trust prosecution in the Supreme Court. The particular trust under consideration to-day is the North River Sugar Refining Company.

A Bruising Match.
NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Jack Fallon and Tom Lees of Australia, fought ten Queensbury rounds with three-ounce gloves in Brooklyn last night, and Fallon got the decision, although the impartial spectators were of the opinion that justice would have been done both men had the referee made it a draw.

Hallen & Hart.

The "Later On" Company to Appear Here.

"Later On," by Henry Grattan Donnelly, is entirely new to St. Louis, says the Chronicle, having been presented for the first time here last night with much success at the Grand. The piece was written to fit the immensely popular Hallen and Hart. It may be said to be distinctly successful in that plenty of scope is furnished for the budget of funny action of the stars and an excellent supporting company. Mr. Hallen strikingly suggests Nat Goodwin both in personal appearance and method. He would be a valuable player of light comedy parts in purely legitimate pieces. His character in "Later On" is made all possible, and the songs and dry sayings were a distinct hit. Mr. Hart is comical in action and make-up and excellent on the banjo. A large audience laughed the piece into a success last night.

The Verneaux of the Plains.

How homely and expressive the vernacular of the plains! Speaking of a highly respected and amiable cowboy who had just been gathered to his sire, a rancher's newspaper says: "The last sickness did the business. The chills jumped on him heavy, and poor S— curled up his larist and passed over the ridge."

Was it "Black Bart?"

The notorious "Black Bart" is suspected of being the man who robbed the Redding stage a short time ago. At all events Wells, Fargo & Co.'s detective is anxious to know where the wily robber is at the present time. At all the stations along the railroad the employees are instructed to keep a sharp lookout for him.

There is no doubt about the honest worth of Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifier. Thousands who have been benefited by its use will attest its virtues. It is a remedy for colds and kind of complaints, and eradicates every trace of disease from the system.

Hall's VEGETABLE SICILIAN Hair Renewer.

Hall's Hair Renewer restores gray hair to its original color; makes the scalp white and clean; cures dandruff and humors; prevents the hair from falling out, and renders it soft and brilliant. The editor of the "Ocean Foam," Cape May, Mass., writes: "We speak knowingly, when we assert that Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is the best of its kind. The article is an elegant and cleanly one, without which we think no toilet complete." Thos. D. Jones, Middle Granville, N. Y., writes: "I have used Hall's Hair Renewer, and now rejoice in the possession of hair as abundant as ever." E. J. Adams, St. Paul, Minn., writes: "A diseased scalp caused my hair to fall out, and, after using a number of preparations without avail, I finally tried Hall's Hair Renewer, which caused a vigorous growth of new hair." Abel H. Smith, Portsmouth, Va., writes: "My hair had nearly all fallen out, and that which was left was dry and dead. I used one bottle of Hall's Hair Renewer, and now rejoice in the possession of hair as abundant as ever." E. G. Perkins, Oberlin, Ohio, writes: "I consider Hall's Hair Renewer the best hair preserver in use. I have used it for the past twenty years, and my hair is as vigorous and healthy a condition as when I was 22 years of age." Dwight L. Chamberlain, Oakland, California, writes: "My hair, which was nearly white, has been restored to its original color and luxuriance by the use of Hall's Hair Renewer."

BICONTINENTAL DAMSELS.SOME PRETTY AMERICAN MAIDS WITH QUANT FOREIGN WAYS.

The International Girl Who Comes Home in the Fall—She is German Franklin, French Demoiselle, English Miss and Young America Rolled in One—She and Her Chaperone Create the Extravagance of the Times—A New Type of New York Girl!

(Copyright 1888.)

The oddest immigration of the year is still briskly under way. For two months it has gone busily forward and the immigrants begin to be a feature of the town. They are girl consignments entirely, tall girls, short girls, plump girls, slim girls, pretty girls almost all; curiously, plausibly interesting girls every one. You study them on the promenade, gaze at them driving in the park and admire them at matines. They are American damsels, and yet more quaintly foreign than many an alien who never before yesterday set foot upon these shores. They talk English, but not with the latest, revised, winter season 1888-89 New York vocabulary. Half of them have an odd little French or German accent which makes one stare with amazement as complicated by the unmistakable New Amsterdam vowels and tones. They are neither fish nor flesh, and hasty would be he who should call them fowl. There is no classification in which one can assign them to genuine and species. They are a product of the time, peculiar, puzzling, charming. They are the domestic-foreign debutantes, just ashore and just ready to make their initial society bows.

The international girls in November have not yet assimilated themselves to home conditions; they are a little bewildered and decidedly bewildering. They are the French convent grafted on the singing school. Daisy Millers caught young and sublimed, little republicans just through with the discipline of monarchial etiquette, brilliant little Yankees sent four or five years ago to be polished and set by the old world jewelers. It is a pretty setting, but an odd one, that they receive. They are used to as rigid chaperoning as a young French girl, as quiet and reserved of speech as an English miss, as European as the whole Eastern continent can make them, and yet the skittish American coot wears the harness a trifle uneasily. They never shy, but there is a restive, native audacity looking out of their foreign-schooled eyes. Exposed at 14, seduced at 18 or 20, the graft of the other continent on this makes a curious social study.

The bicontinental girl dresses in most respects well. That is to say she dresses with a young grace not often bestowed by the native dressmaker. She is not wearing the tailor-made gown, no, not walking with the tailor-made gait. Her Director street suit of smooth-faced green cloth, with full-crossed surplus waist, soft, loose sack and straight, unclipped skirt with band of embroidery around the hem, is fitly crowned by the rounded face of enthusiastic expectancy looking forward to the joys of the season to come. There is a wide hat with a sweeping ostrich plume on her head, green with a hint of black like her gown. Her gloves are green, dark-green dogskin, very probably, with loose wrists and held in place by the latest of all toilet caps, a rose bracelet with twining vine spray in green gold clasped about the arm and a tiny watch peeping from the heart of the flower. Sometimes she carries a Pompadour cane, with curved head in ebony or ivory picked out with silver, and tall enough to touch the feathers blowing with her hair. The hair is not banged. The domestic-foreign girl brushes it off her forehead and rolls it straight back in a little soft puff laid on the top of her head. She is the first of womankind to wear a clinging gown consistently and gracefully. She has a bunch of brilliant mountain ash berries or glowing chrysanthemums tied with ribbons to her cane or clasped in her hand. The law of youth which she has been taught abroad is to be youthful, but when the leading strings are cut she is tempted to jump into a little youthful extravagance.

She does not care for dogs. She never leads a pug or a poodle. She appeared on the street for half an hour a few days since with a web bit of a monkey done up in a sea-skin blanket perched on her shoulder, but, as a rule, she takes her valises without brute attendance. She is not at all athletic. It doesn't go with her training. The Europe-American girl has taken no lessons in boxing or fencing, and she doesn't play tennis with the impetuosity of the homebred maiden. She doesn't swim, though she has bathed a little from the seclusion of a bathing machine. She is too dainty, too fastidious, has too keen a sense of the proprieties for anything very severe. If she has an outdoor hobby, it is probably horseback riding. Not unfrequently she is fond of good horse and rides him well.

She doesn't aim to look muscular and she doesn't make a point of being active. It wouldn't add to her makeup. She doesn't walk with a swing or a spring or a swagger. She doesn't try to show the graceful play of her sinews. She ignores the fact that she has any sinews at all. She wears high-heeled French boots of the old regime and tilts along in them with a pretty little half-affected motion which has been absent from the street so long that it is the absolute novelty of the fall. It isn't businesslike, and it has been the fashion for the veriest butterfly to flutter as if its mind reverted momentarily to the chances of a rise or drop in wheat. She never heard of political culture, and it wouldn't interest her if she had.

She is having a good influence in one direction, in that she has no sentimental weakness for handsome actors. She would open her pretty eyes with amazement and horror at the thought of lingering on Broadway to catch a glimpse of Herbert Kelsey or laying out her pocket money for photographs of Kyle Bellwether. As for sending her picture to Mantell, or writing a note to Dixey, for once the case distinctions she has imbibed serve in excellent stead for common sense.

Though not infatuated with actors, the imported girl is a normal specimen in her devotion to candy. She has had a long fast in the comparative scarcity of sweets abroad, and can hardly be induced to stir, now, without her silver or jeweled bonbonniere securely tucked away in her jacket pocket or fastened, as is the latest whim, to the ends of her sash to give weight and dignity to those airy appendages. She favors candied violets, at present, and one of the shortest routes to her favor is to keep her well supplied.

She does not claim to be intellectual and makes no attempt to look wise. To do her justice, she has no notion of saving the old fashion of looking silly, but brownings has no charms for her, and if a lady seeking were to start a conversation on Hippolyte Spencer she would be pretty glibious, divert the talk if possible, to ribbons, escape, if not, to the other side of the door. She has always some knowledge, not infrequently a critical knowledge, of music, but she is too franky absorbed in life's pleasures to turn aside for students' dreams.

She is most interesting on a waxed floor. When the dancing begins one's eyes are opened to the extent of which she has affected the etiquette of the times. She dances charmingly, but there is no opportunity for a word in her ear when the strain is at an end. Straight back to her chaperon must she be led, there must she sit her down, and any light or bantering sentence must be delivered full in the face of that stately guardian. When her slippers are not in the very act of twinkling she is under her chaperon's wing. Flit, coquet with you ever so little! Her eyes are bright with a spark of mischief, but she won't wander off into the moonlight conservatory before Easter or the last ball before Lent at the least. She is too recently imported a specimen for that sort of thing at society's first gatherings. "May I?" "Would you think it advisable?" "Isn't it all delightful?" Such is her present attitude toward the veriest dragon of a chaperone.

And the rides in the park and the spins on the road and the delightful evenings at the theatre which used to be the privilege of the young man and his best girl? All gone. Not one of them permitted without the attendant chaperone. If it is a case of theatre it's a case of attending the play first by yourself and considering it carefully to make sure that it contains nothing to shock the bud or offend the chaperone. Then it is a case of inviting both, sending flowers to both and devoting yourself to the elder for her graciousness in allowing the younger to appear. If you're a pair of high-steppers that show clean heels, not even by daylight in the bright morning sunshine must you venture to invite mademoiselle out alone. Hardly will she speak to you when the formalities of the code have been fulfilled; she carries in her hand possibly one of the flowers you sent her, dimples when addressed, but listens for the most part to your talk with the preening genue of the occasion.

And if you meet her, meet her by accident, on Broadway of a morning? Certainly you may stop, may walk with her a few paces, may step with her inside the florist's door, but you mustn't be too effusive. You mustn't begin to chat, or her heightened color and uneasy look will tell you she's afraid they don't quite do so in Paris.

She is a charming, half foreign little damsel, with odd, unfamiliar ways, sitting quietly by mamma, saying little, but with glances roving just the same. She can look back to the days before she was exported, and though she has caught the Continental manner so readily she knows that a girl is of a great deal of consequence here after all. The manner fits on her almost uneasily already. She chafes in the harness, and a quaint whimsical creature with old world ways masking a new world independent she will be before spring. The domestic-foreign girl remains different from the native product to the last, but there's no masking her essential Americanism—thank fortune very long. The restraint of education struggling with the flow of spirits Young America gives the a peculiar spicy flavor which seems to suit society's relish in these days. ELIZA PUTNAM HEATON.

Pining To Be of the Elite.

A dimpled, fresh colored, attractive woman was pushing her way up Broadway with a somewhat bewildered air at a busy hour yesterday afternoon. Three months ago this woman was detailing plans for a migration to America at a London breakfast-table with a Yale senior, a Methodist minister from Denver and a New York doctor of divinity, as listeners. Her father-in-law, so she said, was an English squire of the old school. Her young husband was disgusted with quadroons and was a younger son besides. For herself she was a squire's daughter, but democrat through and through. Fitted with a desire to make himself useful in some honest work, her husband, with her encouragement, had learned blacksmithing, but found his position an anomalous one, because certain of the gentry recognized them, while others cut them dead to the annoyance of the aristocratic father-in-law. She wanted to come to the United States, where she had understood a man might work at any trade and still take a social position with his family among the best in the land.

"Can I go into good society if my husband shoes horses?" She put the question bluntly, and the Americans hemmed and hawed.

"Well, really it would be a pity to take such a step under a misapprehension," said the Yale senior.

"The case is often different," said the Denver minister, "in villages from what it is in the large towns."

"New York and London are very much alike nowadays," said the Doctor of Divinity.

Nevertheless her courage served her to come. Her husband shod one or two of the crack roasters in the horse show at Madison Square Garden last week, and she is living in a very small flat up-town. She had found New York a desert thus far, she said yesterday, and she pinned for interesting people to talk to, but she believed her plans could be carried out, and she meant before spring to solace herself with acquaintances literary, artistic, social, of as good material as could be found in the town. She should knock at the door of the society she wanted and it would open and let her in. Will it? That's an interesting question to be answered in all probability in the affirmative. New York is a pretty sensible place after all. The radical blacksmith and his wife might, if they thought it worth while, become the rage.

Sam's Poetical Effort.

Sam's teacher, upon dismissing school Friday afternoon, requested each one of her pupils to bring Monday morning one or more verses of original poetry as a composition. Now, Sam could easily have cut up a cord of wood or ridden an unbroken colt, but to compose poetry was beyond him. Late Sunday afternoon, worn and miserable, he strolled down to the river side, seeking inspiration. There he sat and gazed at the water, his mind in a daze, and Monday morning he appeared at school and triumphantly presented his teacher the following couplet:

A boat went down into the water;
It went down deeper than it ought.

Sage Advice.

Young Sofonis (who is to escort the unattractive Miss Vinagrade to dinner)—"But, my dear boy, how am I to entertain her? How can I flatter her when she is so homely? How?"

Old Boy—"Don't do it. Speak only of the ugliness of others. She'll idolize you!"—Pittsburg Bulletin.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE IN 1889.

WHY is such an enormous circulation? Roberts estimate that between two and three millions of people read each number.

BECAUSE The CENTURY is above every thing else a leader. It led the development of wood-engraving in America, and it has fostered American authors. It is able to attract the best writers. It prints articles for the use of the reading public.

BECAUSE whatever other periodicals may come into the family, the great reading world has found out that "no household can keep abreast of the times without THE CENTURY." Its success is explained by its contents.
